Additional Information and Talking Points:

What are Essential Oils?

Essential oils are the natural, highly concentrated essences extracted from specific herbs in their living state for their healing capabilities. Essential oils can be derived from plants, shrubs, flowers, grasses, fruits, bushes, seeds, roots, bark and trees.

Essential Oils provide key components of the plants' immune systems. They help the plants grow, thrive, evolve, and adapt to surroundings. For example, they protect plants from bacterial and viral infections, heal injuries, repel unwanted insects, prevent water loss and other environmental damage, play a role in plant pollination and deliver oxygen and nutrients into the cells. This is why they are "essential" for a plant -- without them, plants could not survive.

In the human body, they play a similar role -- transporting valuable nutrients to the cells. This is because the three primary elements - carbon, hydrogen and oxygen - are common to both human beings and essential oils.

This shared chemistry makes essential oils highly compatible with human biochemistry. Essential oils are also lipid-soluble with a protein-like structure similar to human cells, making them even more compatible with human cells and tissues.

Since essential oils are bio-familiar to humans, they can also help balance and support the human body to heal itself. Research has shown that essential oils help us fight infection (with anti-bacterial, anti-fungal and anti-viral properties), balance hormones and emotions and aid in regeneration. Essential oils also help the brain, reviving a tired mind and stimulating memory.
